

TEMPO MARKINGS OF BERNARD HERRMANN SCORES

Compiled by Bill Wrobel

Introductory Essay

Below this introduction is a compilation of about 3,700 entries within about 460 tempo markings written by Bernard Herrmann (for the fun of it, below Herrmann's entries I will add sample entries from other film composers for comparison sake). It was compiled from all of his feature film scores, most of his television works (except for the Universal-MCA-Revue Studios works in the mid-Sixties since Universal Studios' hard-line policy is not to admit researchers), many of his radio works, his concert pieces and other non-film works (including his Wuthering Heights opera), his Early Works, and obscure sketch writings.

Of his prolific CBS television works, I am only missing his Rawhide score ("Encounter at Boot Hill" aired 9-14-65) and most of the cues for his Collector's Item pilot. Herrmann also composed four MGM-filmed episodes of The Richard Boone Show ('63-'64 season). It is presumed that the MGM written scores were shamefully dumped into that golf course landfill in the late Sixties, along with the other MGM treasures (including Herrmann's feature film full score for Joy In the Morning, thou fortunately a condensed version of the movie score survives). The rest of the television works are Universal-Revue produced, notably The Alfred Hitchcock Hour, Bob Hope Chrysler Theatre, The Virginian, Kraft Suspense Theatre, and others. See my online paper, "Television Works of Bernard Herrmann."

I worked on all of Herrmann's radio works, notably the Columbia Workshop scores and Corwin shows, but Herrmann did not usually or consistently include tempo markings for those shows. However, Herrmann rather faithfully inserted highly descriptive tempo markings (such as Largo Lamentoso for "The Pool" cue of Journey to the Center of the Earth) in most of his feature film works (except for some of his later works such as Taxi Driver, It's Alive, and even sections of Fahrenheit 451). It's difficult to ascertain an exact percentage, but I am confident I amassed at least 80% to 85% (at least) of Herrmann's tempo markings. [Postscript written January 22, 2006: I partially remedied my incomplete inventory of Herrmann's tempo markings last Friday at UCSB of the Early Works, radio scores, and several features film scores in my research of the microfilm and physical scores. I thank David Seubert for pulling the material for me]

Now: This does not mean that I have included in the list below every available marking of every score I actually had before me. That is, I made definite entries of the so-called "major" markings, especially those that introduce a cue or piece or section of music. Modifier tempo markers such as rall. (rallentando, or "slower"), piu mosso (more movement), meno mosso (less motion), and so forth, I did not include in the Master List. For example, in the "Cady" cue of Cape Fear, the cue opens with the major/introductory tempo marking of Lento (slow). Bar 6 is indicated as piu mosso. It is pointless to indicate all the instances of this modifier because what is it in relation to (compared to what)? Piu mosso is a modifier to indicate that the performers go a bit faster, but in relation to what prior speed? In this case, it is Lento but it could very well have been Moderato or even Allegro.

In the overwhelmingly number of entries, Herrmann inserted the traditional Italian-named tempo markings, but many with creative variations or additions (tempo adornments). Of course the most-used tempo marking was the unadorned Lento marking. Of my large representative sampling (again, most of Herrmann's scores), he used about 480 unadorned Lento markings (or 13.7% of the total). Next would be the unadorned Moderato at about 350 entries of the approximately 3,500 entries (or 10% of the total). Next in frequency was Slow (of course not Italian!) at about 155 or 4.4 %. Slow has the same overall basic meaning (and speed) as Lento, incidentally, as indicated by the metronome markings (as I'll delineate shortly). Next in frequency is the unadorned Largo at about 121 entries (3.5 %). Largo is slower in tempo than Lento, or about 40-50 BPM (Beats Per Minute). Next in frequency is the unadorned Allegro of about 115 entries (or 3.3 %). Next in frequency is Slowly of about 86 entries (or 2.5 %). Slowly is generally a bit slower (in Herrmann's metronome indications) than Slow (or 50-60). Finally the unadorned Andante has about 71 entries or 2%.

Whenever available, I included in each entry the m.m. or metronome marking that Herrmann entered. Alas, this was quite infrequent. I estimate that of my 3,500 entries, only about 6% (about 200 entries) had metronome indications. He tended to put more m.m. numbers on his feature film scores than on his television scores, and practically none in his radio scores (such as Crime Classics where I believe only two, maybe three, scores had m.m. indications). Metronome markings would be essential to gauge the actual (scientific) speed of a cue or section of a cue, although back in Herrmann's period there was no digital click timings. Moreover, remember that these m.m. indications are Herrmann's own and, like the descriptive tempo markings, were approximations, ever varying. For example, Moderato m/m. indications (of about 45 entries that I have) showed a range from 60-80 b.p.m. Allegro ranged from 120-160 (but overwhelmingly at 120). Lento was almost always consistently at 60 b.p.m. (as annotated by Herrmann), and Maestoso ranged from 60-70 (usually 60). Largo ranged from 40-50 b.p.m. (edging towards 40). Molto Pesante (and its derivatives) usually were at 60 b.p.m.. Slow ranged from 50-60, although normally placed at 60, whereas the small sample of Slowly and Very Slowly was usually at 50. Allegro Moderato ranged the most from 60-120 (no weighting on any particular speed). Vivo in my very small sample was normally at 120 b.p.m.

Different texts give different ranges of speed for tempo markings. Normally we have the followed standard and oft-used markings (from slowest to fastest):

Largo to Lento to Adagio to Andante to Moderato to Allegro to Allegretto to Presto

Some texts (such as Grant's Handbook of Music Terms) bestow Adagio as slower than Lento. Some texts give Lento a 50-66 range, while others give a 40-56 range, and so forth. Andante is given a 72-88 range, while other texts attribute a range of 76-108, etc. Some texts give a range of 108-120 to Moderato while others feel that 85-95 is more the real range. The same variation tends to apply to the meanings of the descriptive tempo markings. Adagio is sometimes referred to as slow or even very (quite) slow to moderately slow and leisurely. Andante is often spoken of as being moderate (but rather slow) or simply moderately slow (a moderate walking tempo). Allegretto is considered moderately fast, whereas Allegro is fast (and rather cheerful and lively), rather quick. Moderato is of course “moderate” (a highly generalized and relative indication). Similarly Lento is “slow” but not as slow as Largo (very slow and broad) and perhaps even Grave (slow, seriously solemn & heavy). Presto is faster than Allegro, very fast or quick in fact (almost virtuosic). Vivace is normally lively, spirited & bright, but not necessarily very fast, while others feel it is indeed quick and lively. Vivo, however, tends to be judged as meaning quick & lively (although Allegro vivace) would more accurately indicate this since Allegro is the major tempo indicator with vivace being its modifier). Moreover, many times Vivo is considered to be simply a synonym of Vivace (both predominantly used as modifiers, although Herrmann used vivace more as the modifier and Vivo often as a main tempo marking (for example, Vivo for “The Chariot Ride” cue in The Egyptian). Vivace tends to incorporate both a mood association and a tempo association. It is “lively” so the term tends to mean a rather fast, animated movement. Maestoso is another dual-nuanced marking. It tends to mean majestic or stately and hence mean a relatively slow, solemn movement.

So qualifiers such as Vivace are mood markers that seem to add character connotations in addition to metronome marking suggestions. They are both descriptive terms and metronome setting associations. Qualifiers to primary tempo markings are quite helpful for the composer to convey the intended mood of the piece or section of a piece, or to adjust the ever-changing mood of music in a long piece. It helps the player perform according to a certain style of playing or according to a suggested “feeling.” Modifiers such as accel. and rall. are simple indicators instructing the performers to gradually increase the speed (accel.) or gradually reduce the speed (rall. or ritard.) of a section of music (normal fluctuations in the tempo of music).

Now: Tempo is Italian for “time” (literally speaking). Italian became the default universal musical language for terms for conveying relative speed, mood indicators, and other dynamics since the end of the 17th century. I believe Frescobaldi’s “adagio” became the first established indication (officially?) for the beginning of tempo markings, although Beethoven is normally associated for its consistent use (by a famous composer). Tempi range from the very slow (such as Largo) to the very fast (such as Prestissimo). Moderato became the standard midpoint or temperate speed (neither too slow or too fast). Call it the middle slice of the musical tempo pie. Normally the pace or speed of music is broken down into regular intervals of time called beats. The number of beats in a given period are calculated. The accepted standard measurement period is one minute, hence b.p.m. (beats per minute). Ideally the beginning of a piece should indicate both the metronome marking (or equivalent) and the tempo marking--Italian or English or whatever language the composer holds but it’s best to keep it in Italian for “serious” music (as opposed to, say, modern “pop” music).

Remember that there is no direct equivalence between the two. Allegro does not necessarily mean 120 b.p.m., and 60 b.p.m. does not necessarily mean Lento. It’s all relative, meant as a guide. Also realize that 60 b.p.m. can be written out as 120 b.p.m. if you alter the notational style or structure of your particular piece. So if you double the notation to convert 60 to 120 b.p.m., then you have to make, say, a quarter note into a half note, a half note into a whole note, and so forth. You will create more bar lines in your work (!) but it would not affect the music’s real life speed. Ideally, however, the best method is to create as less symbols as possible (note how common 64th notes were in centuries before).

Assigning music tempo marking is an art, not a strict science, open to interpretation. Maelzel's metronome invention in 1816 did not settle the matter because while a metronome marking may provide an exact tempo (or rather, speed) objectively speaking (designated as b.p.m.), it says absolutely nothing about the character or mood of the music. Verbal descriptive tempo markings are quite important for providing insight into the mood (feeling) of the music that the composer really wishes to convey. Herrmann realized the great importance of tempo markings, especially the adorned ones. Apparently he did not give enough attention to metronome markings since only 6% of his scores had them! Anyway, within the last few years of his life, he "slowed" down his conducting quite noticeably. For example, his tempo for the 7th Voyage of Sinbad's "Fight With the Skeleton" cue was quite slower in his London/Phase Four rerecording (100 b.p.m.) than in the original tracks (120 b.p.m.). This change of pace is not "right" or "wrong" (because he conducted to a different feel of his own music), although the originally intended Allegro Feroce might need to be changed somewhat to reflect the "new" (much slower) pace. Similarly the "Pursuit" cue in Three World of Gulliver was 120 b.p.m. in the original tracks (perhaps a tad bit more) while in the rerecording it was between 90-100 (probably about 96 b.p.m.). "The Trees" cue from that movie was originally set at about 100 b.p.m., whereas the rerecording has it as about 80 b.p.m. (or slightly less). Other cues are only about 10 b.p.m. less (such as "Sunrise" from Journey to the Center of the Earth), and some (a minority) are fairly close to the original speeds, but most are slower. I wonder if any scholar out there ever compared the tempo speeds of various conductors when they were young to those paces on the same works when the same conductors were much older? Perhaps Herrmann's illnesses towards the end of his life prevented him conducting at fast metronome speeds for any considerable length. That's a speculation. Or he simply wanted to slow it down to better savor the music (another speculation).

It would also be interesting to speculate if Herrmann was strongly influenced by his choice of tempo markings when he conducted so many works (principally in the Forties) of others composers. He conducted several of Vaughn Williams works, including the London Symphony at least three separate times! He conducted Ives (3rd & 4th symphonies, etc), Holst of course, Beethoven quite often, Wagner, Debussy (e.g., Claire de Lune), Rimsky-Korsakov, Stravinsky, Copland, Raff, Prokofiev, Tchaikovsky, and many others. I believe Herrmann was influenced by Rachmaninoff somewhat, including Isle of the Dead (set in Lento in 5/8 time with the m.m. as 60). Copland's Appalachian Spring was initially set as Very Slowly in C time (quarter note = 66). Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade was set initially as Largo e Maestoso in 2/2 time (half note = 48). Hanson's Symphony # 2 is initially set as Allegro Moderato in C time (quarter note = 100). The Peer Gynt "morning Mood" is Allegretto Pastorale in 6/8 time (dotted quarter note = 60).

Now: Since Herrmann was a master of mood, it would be logical for him to pay extra attention to tempo mood markings. He probably did not want to spend too much attention on metronome markings since, as a consummate artist, he knew that music is not meant to be quantifiable (science) but qualifiable (art). While important (to make certain "hits" of music with specific actions on the screen), Herrmann's approach was far more "mood music" than "following the action" or musical "micky-mousing" (as Max Steiner tended to focus upon). Since Herrmann’s style was fundamentally mood music, elaborated tempo markings would be important in designating the proper character of the piece. As given earlier, metronome markings were quite secondary to Herrmann.

Herrmann predominantly used traditional Italian terminology (lingo). He also occasionally used English terms, especially Slow (almost never Fast) and Slowly. For some reason, he especially used them for his Crime Classics cues, while he would rarely use Lento for the crime Classics. I believe the only French term was Lent (slow). He did not use German words for tempo markings, although he did for some instruments (customarily Pos for trombones, and Fags for bassoons). As a modifier meaning “very, Herrmann used assai such as Lento assai (very slow or quite slow) in the “Scene d’amour” cue of Vertigo. Interestingly, he would also use the modifier assi that I assume is a synonym for assai (but I cannot verify this). In fact, the use of assi is not normally listed in any of the standard books on tempo marking. I know that Liszt used, say, Lento assi in some of his piano works e.g., Piano Sonata in B minor). Herrmann used that for “The Mushroom Forest” cue in Journey To the Center of the Earth. Tchaikovsky used Moderato Assi in his third symphony. Herrmann used it for “The Grotto” cue in Journey To the Center of the Earth. Howard Hanson used Allegro Assi in his Sixth Symphony (I did not find an Allegro Assi in Herrmann’s works so far, nor even Allergo Assai). So I believe Herrmann saw these unusual tempo markings from other composers that he studied and perhaps conducted, and utilized them occasionally in his own works.

Some colorful tempo markings are seen only once or twice in Herrmann cues. For instance, Allegro con Fuoco (fast with fire) is used in Bar 13 of “The Ridge” cue of Garden of Evil. Many composers used this particular tempo marking, including Tchaikovsky, Dvorak, Chopin, and so forth. You can put “Allegro con Fuoco” in Google to search exact titles. Allegro con Brio (fast with spirit) is used more often. The “Fire Engine” cue from Fahrenheit 451 used this, although I believe it would’ve been humorous and clever if Herrmann instead used Allegro con Fuoco under the circumstances! : )

Now: If you put Herrmann’s metronome markings to the reality test (in my case, comparing them to a downloaded and Winzip executed v 1.5 metronome from Music-Theory.com), you will find that they are not particularly reliable. I think that Herrmann often just habitually put generalized numbers on many cues (especially television works). There are many instances where his marking is pretty dead on as well. Examples of correct metronome markings include:

- “The Genie’s Home” (Molto Tranquillo) from Sinbad in C time. Quarter note = 60.
- “Prelude” (Allegro Molto Pesante) from Sisters in C time. Quarter note = 120.
- “The Cobra Dance” from Sinbad in C time (Allegro). Quarter note = 120.
- “The Chariot Ride” (Vivo) from Egyptian in Cut time. Half note = 120.

Incidentally, the Morgan/Stromberg version on Marco Polo was even faster at about 130 b.p.m.

A sample of unreliable metronome markings written in by Herrmann:

CUE	Herrmann’s M.M	Metronome
“Space Stations” ( Outer Space Suite ) C time	Quarter = 80	Quarter = 106
“Danger” ( Outer Space Suite ) Allegro Mod. In C	Quarter = 100	Quarter = 128
“Signals” ( Outer Space Suite ) Presto in C time	Quarter = 180	Quarter = 152
“The House” ( North by NW ) Moderato in 3/8	Quarter = 60	Quarter = 76

“Overture” ( North by NW ) in 3/8 time.	Quarter = 92	Quarter = 96
-“The Cliff” ( North by NW ) C time	Quarter = 120	Quarter = 110
“The Fight” (with skeleton) Sinbad	Quarter = 120	Q = 126-128
“South Horizon” ( Desert Suite ) C time.	Quarter = 60	Quarter = 80

Many timings strictly or habitually offered as, say, 60 b.p.m. (a so-called “moderate” speed, however the tempo marking is designated) or 120 b.p.m. (so-called “fast” speed) are off slightly. For instance, the “Sultan’s Feast” cue in Sinbad is indicated as 120 b.p.m., but I find that it’s closer to 124 beats. The same applies to “The Police” cue from North by Northwest. “The Fire” in Cut time from Sinbad is given with the half note = 60. The beat is more like 68 b.p.m.

In conclusion, remember that people are creatures of habit. That means composers are creatures of habit as well. Each composer has a familiar list of tempo marking that fits his or her sense of mood. A tempo-marking that, say, Miklos Rozsa would use (but not Bernard Herrmann) may indeed fit a piece of music that Herrmann composed. It would be interesting to apply some of the unique tempo markings of Rozsa and apply them to Herrmann cues that would “fit” (and vice versa). Creativity in tempo marking usually involves the choice of modifiers/qualifiers. For the opening of the II movement of Rozsa’s Concerto (Op. 17) we find Lento con gran espressione (quarter note – ca. 52). Herrmann never used that particular tempo marking, but I am sure we can find certain Lento cues of Herrmann that could conceivably fit the bill. “The Bedroom” cue from Fahrenheit 451 could fit that bill, or “The Sea” cue from Ghost & Mrs. Muir. Instead Herrmann choose to use the unadorned Lento tempo marking. He could’ve been more colorful in many such cases, but perhaps he was rushed or the inspiration for the “right” phrasing of words did not come to him (although the right phrasing of music did come to him!). We don’t know. The point is that tempo marking can also be an art form, and it’s meaning is relative (not necessarily tied to a specific cue by a specific composer!). But perhaps a student of Herrmann’s techniques may be able to learn from the raw data of tempo markings I have provided below.

Enjoy!
